

Study Skills for Lifelong Learners

I am an MYP English Language and Literature teacher at an IB school called Wotton House International School, UK. Besides teaching English, I am also overseeing the interdisciplinary unit planning and teaching as well as the development of the ATL (Approaches to Learning) programme of study at our school.

In this workshop, I will present how we started to implement Study Skills (or ATLs) across our curriculum. We will look at various skills such as communication, critical-thinking, affective skills, information & media literacy, and many more which are vital for the process of our students becoming lifelong learners. This approach enables them to explicitly practise, develop and demonstrate the skills needed for their studies and future carers.

My teaching experience started fresh out of University for an International School, where I went from a teaching role to a YL Director of Studies position. This enabled me to dive into the world of teacher training all over Europe, where I had the privilege to meet and work with some of the most amazing educators in the field of English Language and Literature. Eventually, love has brought me to the UK, where I now live with my partner and two daughters, who are already sharing my passion for languages and exploring the world. Before becoming a teacher at Wotton House International School, I worked at several schools across the Cotswolds.
